A Damped Down Equality

During a recent spiritual formation gathering among the residents of Richmond Hill, a very rich conversation ensued as we reflected on the topic of “equality.” Equality is the title of Chapter 9 of Monastery of the Heart by Joan Chittister—a book being read by many in the Richmond Hill community. One particular paragraph in this chapter sparked the enlivened roundtable:

“The principle is a clear one: ‘The Spirit blows where it will.’ We cannot damp down the fire of the Spirit on the basis of anything but the greater movement of the Spirit itself.”

The conversation brought to mind how often in our daily life we witness the Spirit of God at work in ordinary ways—in the rhythmic life of prayer, worship, meals, conversations, staffing duties and the many other ministry and program endeavors. Yet, in spite of the continued awareness of God’s presence, quite often an extraordinary wind of the Spirit blows among us and the ordinary is “damped down” by its presence.

An analogy for understanding what happens in these experiences would be akin to falling asleep with the lamp on our nightstand still burning, only to awaken to the brightness of the morning sun with the lamplight having little to no effect on the room. Or, it may be akin to those times when an epiphany occurs—in a greater degree of knowledge or understanding creeps in—to overshadow some elementary truth that has fashioned one’s thinking for a long period of time.

Further reflection on Chittister’s writing brought to mind the thought that perhaps the term equality itself is being “damped down” under the light of understanding that is presently opening up to us. Often thought of or defined in a way that denotes being “the same or identical,” equality as it pertains to human beings doesn’t mean same or identical at all. Rather, it means “to value” different people, or the things affecting all people, on the same level or with the same degree of concern.

With the present socio-political climate of our nation provoking us to a greater awareness of an increased disregard for equality among people groups, there is generally increased talk about a need for a level playing field or equal opportunity. Most of us understand this talk to mean that people want to know that “Equality Under the Law,” specified in our Constitution (Article 14, Sect. 1) truly means that nothing is done to abridge the privileges or immunities of anyone, deprive anyone of due process of law, nor deny anyone (without discrimination) equal protection of the law. Basically, that the Law isn’t playing favorites. However a greater infusion of light into what is being talked about may mean that people are simply asking for a system that is not rigged against them; nor laden with hindrances to them being able to explore opportunities through their own efforts.

A current and specific example of talk about a level playing field may be seen through the lens of equality in public education. Perhaps this is an area in which greater light is being infused. Most of us, when considering equality in public education, recognize that policies and practices put in place to suit everyone may appear to be non-discriminatory, but may not address the specific needs of certain groups of people. Therefore, in effect they become indirectly discriminatory. The eight honorees of the 2016 Living Legacy Breakfast, hosted by the RPS Education Foundation, each attested to the fact that substantive and sufficient opportunity characterize a kind of equality in education that ensures that all children... start from a good enough place. A place that includes appropriately functioning schools that accommodate the gifts and abilities of each student; as well as a safe, loving and supportive community of parents, teachers and other adults. Brief speeches by all of the honorees, based on their own personal stories, attested to the fact that great (not just average) things can happen when all students are given sufficient and equal opportunity.

An understanding of a transforming equality, which “damps down” the equality we presently know, is captured in a verse from Maya Angelou’s poem, Equality, written in 1990:

“Take the blinders from your vision, take the padding from your ears, and confess you’ve heard me crying, and admit you’ve seen my tears.”

Along with this verse and the poem’s refrain, “Equality, and I will be free,” Maya Angelou’s voice can still be heard. Taking us beyond policies and procedures, we are reminded that when things are out of balance, all of creation cries out. However, the solution is there for the taking—the manifestation of the children of God. When those whose minds and circumstances have been infused by the greater light of a transforming equality, they will hear the cry to be free as a need to be equally seen, heard, and catapulted to excel. Any insufficient equality presently being experienced is “damped down.” The greater equality illumines minds and hearts. The greater humanity comes alive; and it is what God calls “good.”

Revive Richmond

How Cool Is That?!

The youth of our Armstrong Leadership Program are redefining what it means to be cool. In fact, they have started a campaign to spread the word and change its meaning.

Campaign Cool, as it’s called, is an effort by students to invite their peers, teachers, and an even wider circle of people to embrace a renewed understanding of what it means to be fully alive.

Their efforts are providing hope and possibility for change right here in Metro Richmond.

Bucking the typical trend of fitting in at all costs, Campaign Cool calls for something more: an affirmation of one’s unique gifts and a willingness to “give back to the world.”

I got to see it on display not long ago when I attended a StageWrite performance at the Virginia Repertory Children’s Theatre. Professional theatre artists worked with the Armstrong youth for several months to develop leadership skills and self-confidence through writing and stage experience. That culminated with a stage production that included the dramatic reading of original poetry, quotes from Langston Hughes, video productions, music and dance. The Armstrong kids performed with a confidence and ease that I know I lacked at their age. When it came to getting on stage at 16, I was anything but cool.

Following the program, there was an open forum for the youth to reflect on their experience in the course. They were courteous as they thanked their mentors and then the audience for attending. They mentioned finding courage, developing new skills, having fun. Dashawn Winston, a junior at Armstrong, said he didn’t know he had it in him. When he heard himself reading, and then reciting by heart the words he’d written, he surprised himself. Now that’s cool.

We say the children are our future, and it’s true. If the Armstrong Leadership Program is any indication, that future is bright. These are the kids who spoke out when their school was recently threatened with closure. These are the kids who marched around City Hall. These are the kids who got on stage again to teach about gentrification in the East End and spark needed discussion. These are the kids who invite us now to rethink what it means to be cool.

I don’t know about you, but for the sake of the revitalization of Metro Richmond, that’s a campaign I’m willing to join.

Armstrong Leadership In Action
Hidden in plain sight

This semester, a few University of Richmond sophomores got another perspective on gentrification when they began meeting with students from Armstrong High School’s Leadership Program.

Together they developed a play that provided an opportunity to show a side of Church Hill that doesn’t get included when the neighborhood attracts national media attention for its history, architecture and restaurants. It was their chance to highlight what’s often hidden in plain sight: the public housing communities, the families that move because rent gets too high, and the vast differences in life experiences from one block to the next. Armstrong students, including Chelsea Trammell, wrote original poetry that was a part of the play.

The future’s unreasonable. It can give us good, or it can give us bad. It’s up to the people, the community, the families, the neighborhoods, to bring us justice. Will we run or will we fight? Fight for our memories, for our history, for the love that we share for our name. It’s all in our hand, to create our own future. — Chelsea Trammell

Following the performance of Church Hill: a Changing Neighborhood, neighborhood residents lead a panel discussion. The focus of the discussion was to help break down walls and shatter assumptions, in an effort to learn about others’ stories and to encourage inclusiveness and active listening. The communities engaged in conversations about their future. For Virginia Currents story visit this link: http://ideastations.org/radio/news/students-explore-gentrification-through-documentary-drama

PRAYING WITH THE SONGS OF TAIZÉ
Leader: Jim Bennett
7:30 p.m. first Monday of each month
Taizé worship is contemplative and meditative in character, using short songs, repeated again and again in a candle lit chapel. Using just a few words, the songs express a basic reality of faith, quickly grasped by the mind. As the words are sung over many times, the hope is this reality will gradually penetrate one’s whole being. Meditative singing thus becomes a way of listening to God.

We invite you to participate in our practice of Taizé which includes singing, prayer for Metropolitan Richmond, and a period of silence. Jim Bennett is a skilled musician and leads this time of worship with a variety of musical instruments.

SOAKING PRAYER SERVICE
DeBorah Cannady, Leader
3rd Mondays at 7:30 p.m. and 1st Thursdays at 10:00 a.m.
Those struggling with illness have benefitted from being “soaked in prayer” over periods of time. Prayer ministers are available to pray with those desiring emotional, spiritual, or physical healing. Participants are invited to find a comfortable place, sit, relax, and receive prayer. Participants may also come and go during the service.

EUCHARIST FOR GENERATIONAL HEALING
5th Mondays at 7:30 p.m.
Once a quarter, Richmond Hill offers a Eucharist for Generational Healing. This is an opportunity to invite God’s healing into your family, including the generations that have gone before and the generations that will come after you. Please bring the blessings as well as the pains and traumas of your ancestry written on a piece of paper (not to be shared). For more information call DeBorah Cannady at 783-7903.

CREATING PATHWAYS THROUGH GRIEF
A Day Retreat
9:00 am – 4:00 pm, Friday, May 13

Activities include:
- Collage (Vision Board)
- Writing (various exercises)
- Create a Mandala

The expressive arts have long been helpful in processing our grief. It is often restorative to bypass the intellect and work with our hands and heart. We can express our grief and find new insights about the journey. People are often amazed by what unfolds from their creative efforts. The retreat also includes an opportunity to share what has been created with other retreatants. Other expressive art opportunities will also be available including a dream work exercise, a choice of various writing exercises and an art for “stuck points” in the grief journey exercise.

Facilitator: Sandy Gramling, Ph.D., Spiritual Director and Coordinator of Grief Ministries at Richmond Hill.

Suggested donation: $20.00 (includes lunch)

God knows our needs

When seen from an airplane even large items seem tiny. Cars appear like ants. Farmland is just a patch quilt. It can make us feel insignificant in comparison. Yet God sees each one of us and loves us as individuals. Can we imagine looking down at a five acre spread and knowing exactly how many stalks of grain or blades of grass it holds? That is an impossible task in human terms but God knows the very number of hairs on our head. He loves us enough to know all the amazing details about each of us. God knows our every need.

In Jesus’s parable of the sower some seed fell among thorns. Jesus explained: “Those which fell among thorns are those which when they have heard, go forth and are choked with cares, riches and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection” (Luke 8:14) (NKJV). We can respond to the pressures of this world in two ways. We can be choked by them or we can be challenged to fight against them. As Christians, we must be on guard continually against the weeds of disharmony and the thorns of gossip. Let us prove to be good soil and bring forth fruit.

Life does not turn out as we planned. A winter vacation to the beach may be dampened by cold weather. A marriage may be destroyed by unfaithfulness. Whatever the disappointment, great or small, we can tell God about it for He knows and cares about it. This is not to say we must let go and move on without our mourning for our losses. The healing process often takes time. Eventually the cold winds of disappointment will give way to the warm breeze of God’s Love.

Children cry for many reasons. They cry when they are hungry, when they are sad and when they are hurt. What makes us cry? Surely our own hurts and frustrations will occasionally make us feel like crying. What about for others? Do we cry for their pain? God calls us to bear one another’s burdens. This call is for more than a casual prayer for them as we drift off to sleep. Bearing one another’s burdens means trying to lift and carry part of the weight no matter how little we think we can help. Pray, “God, help me to look beyond myself so I can see the burdens I might help to bear this month.”

In a country that treasures freedom, we build monuments to honor those who gave their lives in the fight for freedom for the citizens of our country and the world. Yet the monuments are not built for the dead. They are built for us — for we never forget the price that was paid. A great price was also paid for our freedom from sin. “For you are brought with a price: Therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are both God’s (1 Corinthians 6:20) (NKJV). Victory and freedom are offered. They are ours to receive. God knows all our needs.

Rev. Dr. Alice W. Harris
Pastoral Counselor

Living by the rule

In April, I took some time for a silent retreat at the Holy Cross Abbey, a Trappist monastery in Berryville, Virginia…1400+ acres of rich farmland located on the west bank of the Shenandoah River. I think John Denver was correct in his lyric: “…almost heaven, West Virginia.” They got the “almost,” because we’ve received the real thing — the eastern Blue Ridge mountains in spring must surely be the foothills of Heaven itself.

In the summer of 2012, an important question arose within the first three months of me moving into the residential community here at Richmond Hill: “Where does one go on retreat when one lives at a retreat center?” I’d encountered a similar Zen-like koan many years ago as I was leaving VCU to find a break into the advertising business: “We don’t hire students. Come see us when you’ve got some experience.” Good thing I love a good puzzle.

Initially, I was simply too busy learning and living into life in the community to slow down and take a retreat. So much to do, and all of it Kingdom work. Wow! What’s not to like? And, it was all good, until I found myself getting testy with my colleagues in community. When I was rude to some guests about making coffee, I knew it was time to pull back. That’s the definition of retreat, right?

Seven years ago, my spiritual director posed a question about my Rule of life. As I had no idea what he was talking about, he recommended I do some work around my Rule of life. As I had no idea what he was talking about for my Rule of life in the community to slow down and take a retreat.

When it came to obeying the Rule, I was being, well, unruly. The Rule, as I am finding out, is a lot like the Sabbath. That is, it is not something we feel we have to do. Rather, it should be something we want to do — because it gives us back our lives. It restores us, not restricts us. My reluctance to go on retreat was not so much out of ignorance. Rather, it was more out of fear — fear of being caught by God in the silence, far away from all my familiar distractions, with nowhere to hide. And He caught me. Thanks be to God!
